SYNOPSIS:

Due to a reorganization, two teams merged into one. The new team wanted to create a solid foundation for working together, as well as resolve some old issues related to the reorganization and two previously separate teams.

Team members recognized their diversity of experience and commitment to success but lacked clarity about who they were and how to come together as a new, combined team. They were grappling with how things used to be, and transitioning to how things need to be in the future. They needed to work through some of the old "stuff" to move forward.

Through the process of revealing how the team saw its strengths and challenges, and through coaching the team to build team competencies, the team shifted from ambiguity and concern about change, to an aligned team who was extremely supportive of each other while making progress on their goals.

SPECIFIC BEHAVIOR CHANGE:

- > Trusting each other's positive intent instead of making assumptions
- > Taking time to learn from each other and share subject matter knowledge
- > Helping each other and working to build relationships in difficult times

- > We're now excited about "what's next" and no longer afraid of what might happen.
